INFORMATION

Of all the established country artists to flirt with rockabilly and rock 'n' roll during the 1950s, Marty Robbins was probably the one who hated that music the most – but made the most authentic records! On tour in Florida with Elvis Presley in 1955, Marty Robbins saw the future... and it rocked! He covered Elvis's hit That's All Right and recorded a slew of rockabilly classics like Tennessee Toddy and Respectfully Miss Brooks, along with hillbilly cat covers of rock 'n' roll songs like Maybelline and Long Tall Sally. Even after leaving rockabilly behind and returning to country, he pursued a parallel career in teen pop with records like Teen-Age Dream, Grown-Up Tears and Stairway Of Love. This compilation gathers all of Robbins' rockabilly records along with the cream of his teen pop and rock 'n' roll recordings from the 1950s and '60s. In all, 29 fabulous tracks all taken from the original masters plus a bonus track of the only known recording of Marty Robbins performing the rockabilly classic, Sugaree – a song he'd written and placed with the Jordanaires, Hank Ballard, Rusty York and many others. It's a fascinating and rockin' look at a country music superstar who might have been a rock'n'roll pioneer if things had turned out differently!
